A hacker conference that's all about passwords, PIN codes, and digital authentication.

Passwords are the most prevalent form of authentication in the digital age, and are the first line of defense against unauthorized access in most systems. Even if you are using some other form of authentication for a particular service, there's still a password in the chain somewhere — it all comes back to relying on something somewhere being password-protected. But after 50 years of computing evolution, 123456 and password still top the list of most frequently

19 Online Cheating Site AshleyMadison Hacked

JUL 15

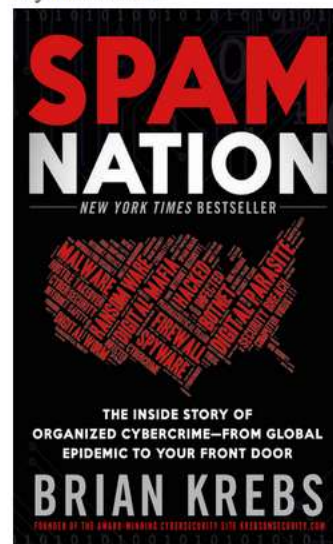

Large caches of data stolen from online cheating site AshleyMadison.com have been posted online by an individual or group that claims to have completely compromised the company's user databases, financial records and other proprietary information. The still-unfolding leak could be quite damaging to some 37 million users of the hookup service, whose slogan is "Life is short. Have an affair."

The data released by the hacker or hackers — which self-identify as The Impact Team — includes sensitive internal data stolen from Avid Life Media (ALM), the Toronto-based firm that owns AshleyMadison as well as related hookup sites Cougar Life and Established Men.

Reached by KrebsOnSecurity late Sunday evening, ALM Chief Executive Noel Biderman confirmed the hack, and said the company was "working diligently and feverishly" to take down ALM's intellectual property. Indeed, in the short span of 30 minutes between that brief interview and the publication of this story, several of the Impact Team's Web links were no longer responding.

Polygamist MK found on hacked infidelity website

By LARRY GREENZ
09/03/2015

Joint List's Taleb Abu Arar denies he registered for Ashley Madison, 36 million email addresses have been leaked.

The official Knesset email address of Joint List MK Taleb Abu Arar was found to have registered for Ashley Madison, a dating website for people who want to cheat on their spouses, when hackers released about 36 million members' email addresses.

According to the hack, Abu Arar not only registered for the infidelity site, he confirmed his email address. That extra step is not necessary in order to join Ashley Madison, but the hack indicates that 24 million of the email addresses released were confirmed.

Abu Arar denied having any connection to the website and said he plans to file a complaint to the police.

"Someone signed up with my email address in order to sully my good name," he said, calling for Ashley Madison to reveal the source of the registration.

Knesset email addresses can be accessed by lawmakers and their aides on the Knesset's secure computers, or via an encrypted connection from computers outside the Knesset, and with a code on the MKs' and aides' phones.

Unlike the average hacked Ashley Madison user, Abu Arar will have to explain his presence on the infidelity site to not one wife, but two. The second wife is by a common-law marriage. In order not to break the law against bigamy, Abu Arar, who is Beduin, has a combined 10 children from both of them.

Last month, in an interview with the Knesset Channel, Abu Arar said Beduin men have multiple wives "when needed," and posited that it is better that he continue being married to his first wife after marrying his second one, than divorcing the first and making her unhappy.

When asked if having a second wife doesn't make the first wife unhappy, Abu Arar said, "Maybe less."

"So you're saying she agreed to it?" the interviewer, Nechama Duenk asked.

"Not necessarily," he responded, before stating that Jews had polygamy. Duenk said that Judaism prohibited polygamy in the 11th century.

"It is known that there are women who are harmed by polygamy, when the man neglects the first wife, but I'm not neglectful," Abu Arar added.

Abu Arar was originally found in the hacker's released list by Dan, a blogger for the pro-Israel site israelcool.com, who did not give his last name.

The MK's email address was one of some 50 .gov.il addresses that appeared in the database, which included listings from the hospitals and the Health Ministry, courts, the Justice Ministry, the Tel Aviv Municipality, and even the Defense Ministry.

What I learned from cracking 4000 Ashley Madison passwords

The Plan

When the Ashley Madison database first got dumped, there was an interesting contingent of researchers talking about how pointless it would be to crack the passwords, since Ashley Madison was using salted bcrypt with a cost of 12. I thought it might be a fun experiment to run the hashes on a cracking rig of mine to see what I could actually get out of it.

The Rig

My cracking rig is your typical milk carton style setup, as seen on Silicon Valley.

It was originally purchased a couple years ago as a cryptocoin mining rig for about $1500 in bitcoins. Pretty much just a stack of four ATI R9 290s running PIMP (<http://getpimp.org>). PIMP is a Debian based USB boot environment designed for plug and play cryptocoin mining. I find it super convenient to use because it deals with all the GPU driver BS, and by default gives you the most optimized setup for whatever cards you're using. To give it the magical cracking powers, I dropped the most recent oclHashcat in there as well.

The Procedure

So, the data showed up in the form of a mysqldump.

gunzip member_login.dump.gz
tr , '\n' < member_login.dump > tmp.txt # switching commas for newlines grep "$2a" tmp.txt > tmp2.txt # grepping out hashes
tr -d '"' < tmp2.txt > am.txt # removing single quotes

Once seen as bulletproof, 11 million+ Ashley Madison passwords already cracked Programming errors make 15.26 million accounts orders of magnitude faster to crack.

When the Ashley Madison hackers leaked close to 100 gigabytes' worth of sensitive documents belonging to the online dating service for people cheating on their romantic partners, there seemed to be one saving grace. User passwords were cryptographically protected using bcrypt, an algorithm so slow and computationally demanding it would literally take centuries to crack all 36 million of them.

Now, a crew of hobbyist crackers has uncovered programming errors that make more than 15 million of the

The terms of service of hacked extramarital dating service Ashley Madison allow the company to run fake accounts, protecting it from at least some user lawsuits in the wake of its massive data breach in August.

The company had previously denied allegations of a "fembot army", but according to information in the data dump, it actually ran tens of thousands of fake female accounts to send millions of messages to users.

However, in the terms and services of the site, it explicitly warns would-be cheaters that many users of the site subscribe "for purely entertainment

Nå skal jeg ikke ta mer av tida di, men sårbarheten for ytterligere brukerskader kan ligge i at IT kan bli provosert av tregheten i lovsystemet, evt vil holde saken varm. Hils ihvertfall publikum og andre og advar om hva slags psykisk helvete litt ubeteksomhet på nettet kan føre med seg. Jeg er nærmest en fullstendig slagen mann, vet ikke om jeg noengang klarer å reise meg igjen. Og jeg hadde et liv med mange store kvaliteter. Ikke som sutring, men som "matter of fact" og kraftig advarsel.

I am not going to waste any more of your time, but the potential of additional user damages due to «Impact Team» being provoked by the slow legal process etc may keep the story in the media. Tell the audience and others and warn them about the psychological hell a little bit of rashness online can lead to. I am almost a completely broken man, and I don't know if I will ever be able to stand up again. And I had a life full of great qualities. Not as whining, but as a «matter of fact» and a strong warning.
